There should be no silence in the library!

From GK - 11/10/2017

Every third resident of Belarus is a library user! I read this interesting news on the BELTA website. And I was very surprised that the book has not been forgotten in the age of information technology. That is why one day I found myself in the place of the librarian of the subscription hall of the central regional library named after. I. Chigrinova, was able to learn the secrets of the profession and everything that is hidden on the other side of the library department.

Instead of a foreword, the working morning began with an introduction to my area of work. In one of the halls I was greeted by orderly rows of shelves with books. At first glance, silent. But you know how much they can tell, it's worth opening at least one of them. Plunging into the sea of Soviet, foreign, classical, Belarusian, industrial literature... I understood that there was something authoritative and unshakable in these printed books; they have a special smell, and each has its own appearance, color, character. This is how much knowledge a librarian should have in order to please his reader! It is necessary to understand not only fiction, but also all areas of science. A librarian must be a literary critic, historian, teacher, psychologist, philosopher and even an economist, because There are paid services.

Not a day without a book!
Tuesday was not pleasant with the weather: chilly and rainy. It's unlikely that anyone would want to visit the library in such bad weather, I thought, studying the reader database on the computer. But I was wrong. After nine in the morning the first book lovers rushed here.

A schoolgirl came for program literature. I have to find on my own in the sea of books the work of R. Bradbury “Fahrenheit 451”. Oh, this excitement of searching and the delight of victory! It is familiar to every real librarian! I fill out the reader form. “Will you sign for the book,” I tell the schoolgirl, handing her the form. But I myself think: it’s still great that young people read, even according to the school curriculum. Even though some people may not be able to master the entire work, it is encouraging that the book remains in demand. After all, it is important to instill in young people a love for their culture, literature and language from an early age.

I felt very confident at the pulpit, diligently fulfilled the duties of a librarian, filled out reader forms, and arranged books on the shelves.
And here are more visitors. Maria Stefanovna Sidorenko is a real bookworm! And it cannot be any other way. After all, she worked in the library for thirty years. Now she is on a well-deserved retirement, but she has not lost her love of reading. Moreover, she also involved her relatives in useful work. This category of readers has family forms. By the way, there are 83 such families registered. Maria Stefanovna rereads her favorite work two or three times. Says that…
